A REFERENCE AND OPERATIONAL GUIDE OF CRIMINAL OFFENSES TO ENCOURAGE
UNIFORMITY AMONG FINGERPRINT
CONTRIBUTORS.

JOHN EDGAR HOOVER, DIRECTOR
FEDERAL BUREAU OF INVESTIGATION
UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE

000331

Following is a list of standardized abbreviations which should be used in showing charges listed on fingerprint cards submitted to the FBI. Much better service can be provided if all departments and agencies will use these abbreviations rather than Federal, state, county, or municipal code numbers which are not readily understandable by all interested parties. Additional copies of this list can be obtained by writing to the Director, Federal Bureau of Investigation, United States Department of Justice, Washington 25, D. C.

We forwarded the wrong set of fingerprints to you for transmittal to FBI. We obtained a certified photostat of the original from Calgary City Police for the purpose of forwarding. This was again photostated and that is the copy which you received.

I am sending you the correct copy which should be of better quality. Calgary City Police are reluctant to release the original held on their files and this is why we have to accept a photocopy. Interview With William H. Webster, Director, Federal Bureau of Investigation

As FBI Charts a New Course— Its Main Targets Now

Agents are chasing a lot fewer bank robbers and car thieves, reports the bureau's new chief. They're stalking bigger game—white-collar criminals, mobsters, spies—while striving to rebound from past scandals.

Q Judge Webster, in view of the tight budget President Carter is proposing for the FBI as well as for most of the rest of the federal government, what are the bureau's priorities?

A Our top-priority programs are white-collar crime; organized crime and, of course, foreign counterintelligence. Coming hard on those would be things like civil rights, general-property crimes, personal crimes and antitrust.

About 18 percent of our resources in the field are currently directed against white-collar crime, and about the same for organized crime.

Q Where are you concentrating your efforts against white-collar crime?

A I'd say that government frauds, public corruption and major bank-embezzlement cases constitute our prime targets. Fraud in government programs is a cause of major efforts. We already have 41 indictments in the General Services Administration investigation. The Small Business Administration investigation is now off the ground.

These efforts are going to require a great deal of cooperation with other government agencies and with the inspectors general being appointed in a number of agencies.

Q Has there been a sizable step-up in public-corruption investigations?

A Yes. Last February, we were investigating 574 cases of corruption at all levels of local, state and federal government. Now that number is closer to 900.

We are investigating under very scrupulous, self-imposed guidelines because we recognize that reputations of public officials are fragile and that a mere investigation by the FBI is enough to cause problems. So we don't go into those cases unless there is a very substantial basis for investigation.

Q Where does the U.S. stand in the war on organized crime?

A We have made real progress in identifying the structure of organized crime in this country. There are approximately 27 "families," but we don't confine ourselves in our thinking to those traditional family operations. We look at ongoing criminal enterprises as organized crime: those which have continuity as their essential ingredient and involve numbers of people.

These operations are getting more and more sophisticated, involving larger sums of money and greater potential ripoffs of the public. And it requires greater sums of our money to deal with them. So we're training our young agents to understand computer frauds and techniques unknown 20 years ago—techniques for both solving crimes and committing them. But when you talk about the growth or decline of crime, you always have to ask whether you're finding out about something that was always there or whether there's a measurable increase.

Q How is the bureau dealing with the infiltration of legitimate business by organized crime?

A One of the most effective tools is the RICO statute—

Webster, 54, is the sixth person to head the FBI in its 43-year history. A Republican, he was named by Carter to succeed Clarence Kelley a year ago, after eight years as a federal judge in St. Louis.

the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations statute. It's been around for six or seven years, but prosecutors have now realized its potential, and it's being effectively used. It has real teeth in it. It carries a potential 20-year imprisonment and a $25,000 fine, and—most importantly—it provides for seizure of the business infiltrated.

The law covers any ongoing criminal enterprise. It's possible for a city council to be a criminal enterprise if it's operating as such. Arson for hire is no longer the attractive world it used to be because of the RICO statute, under which we can prosecute arsonists and take away the fruits of that activity.

Q Are informants still of use against organized crime?

A Yes. It's absolutely necessary to have reliable sources of information. But most such sources insist upon confidentiality—and properly so. In the past, law enforcement has always been able to guarantee this. Today, that guarantee is a concern in light of the Freedom of Information Act and court orders requiring disclosure of informants' identities. This is the greatest threat to effective law enforcement today. There are two adverse effects:

First, informants are unwilling to supply information, because they're not convinced we'll be able to keep it confidential. Second, when our young agents develop informants as part of their responsibility, they have trouble doing so in good conscience because they are doubtful about their ability to guarantee confidentiality.

As a result, the number of informants has shrunk.

Q Is it really possible to learn the name of an informant through a Freedom of Information Act request?

A We have conducted tests to see whether it's possible. It can be done.

Prisoners believe that it can be done. When I first came to Washington, between 6 and 7 percent of all our Freedom of Information requests were coming from prisons. Now over 12 percent are coming from prisons. The obvious purpose is to see who was responsible for putting them in there. Organized-crime figures are now engaging in this activity, and there is the same potential for foreign-intelligence agents.

Q What can be done?

A I've suggested that consideration be given to a 10-year moratorium on releasing closed criminal-investigative files. That would put age on the file, and I think would be a reasonable assurance to an informant—who would be long gone by that time. There would have to be provisions for an Attorney General's waiver of the moratorium in a case of high national interest.

The Freedom of Information Act has a high purpose, and I'm in favor of that purpose: making sure that federal agencies are truthful with the American people. But when you get into law enforcement, where lives and safety can well be at stake, you have to balance that value against our duties to keep accurate records and safeguard the confidentiality of our sources.

Q In view of the drop in the number of informants, are you stepping up the use of undercover FBI agents?

A We are, and the results are tremendously rewarding. Undercover agents were important in a recent record-and-tape-pirating case. We have a remarkably elite cadre of volunteers. No one is ever ordered to engage in undercover activities. These are people who have a certain talent and the psychological capacity to deal effectively with role playing and still accept the tough discipline of the FBI.

Q You said foreign espionage is a top priority. Is it growing?

A As the government takes the posture of more and more openness, our job becomes bigger and bigger, because we find a direct correlation between intelligence activities and the number of visits by foreign nationals from hostile countries. Last year, we had over 65,000 such visits if you add up the 1,900 Soviet-bloc officials and their families in this country and all the merchant-seaman stops by Soviet nationals and all of the visiting trade-association groups and exchange students.

Now we're looking at the recognition of the People's Republic of China. They had about 70 mission officials in this country prior to recognition, but they historically have demanded parity with the Soviet Union in the numbers of accredited diplomats in other countries where they're recognized. So we're facing maybe 1,200 additional Chinese officials and their families, plus another 500 to 700 students by August. My concern is that our encouragement of technological improvement in China produce legitimate technological improvement and does not lead to the stealing of technology by intelligence gatherers.

Q What can the bureau do to prevent such activity?

A We hope to raise the level of sensitivity among business officials so that they are careful with their own proprietary secrets and the classified information that's entrusted to them by the government.

We also use our counterintelligence division, and we work very closely with the CIA. I think we have the best working relationship in the history of the two agencies. And, of course, we work with the Special Coordination Committee, chaired by Zbigniew Brzezinski, to develop the same kind of effectiveness throughout the intelligence community.

Q Have the accusations directed at the FBI recently hurt its effectiveness as the chief U.S. law-enforcement agency?

A The time spent in identifying and evaluating the accusations has consumed a good deal of energy—much of it worthwhile, I think. We've learned a lot about ourselves and our procedures. I think we're largely past that period now. We're looking at things in a new light. We're going on.

Q Just how is the bureau operating differently as a result of disclosures that FBI agents took part in questionable buggings, break-ins and mail openings?

A We now have guidelines put in place in 1976 by the Attorney General. They have been scrupulously observed. I'm not aware of any single case made against an FBI agent on the grounds of constitutional-rights violations since the guidelines went into effect.

Q What do the guidelines provide?

A The foreign-counterintelligence guidelines are classified—at least in part—so it's difficult to discuss them.

The domestic-intelligence guidelines deal with what we call our terrorism program. Under them, we have to have information that an organization or its members are engaging in—or are planning to engage in—acts of force or violence directed against the United States. If we don't have that, we do not open a file, we do not conduct an investigation.

As a result, literally hundreds of investigations from the past have been closed. We're now investigating between 12 and 16 domestic organizations—it changes from time to time—and from 40 to 60 individuals associated with those organizations, all of whom are engaged in terrorist activity.

Q How do you know that a group isn't planning a bombing or some other violence if you don't keep a close watch?

A We take a certain risk, one consistent with the American tradition. Domestic organizations have a right to form and people have a right to express their views without the expectation that the FBI will be putting informants in place to find out what's going on.

You have to decide whether you're going to put people into thousands of organizations just to wait for someone to talk about planning a bombing, or whether you will develop information through voluntary informants—either inside or on the outside—who will provide a basis for investigation. Looking at the number of terrorist bombings around the country in the last two or three years—they're running at about 100 a year—it's a reasonable risk to take.

I'm completely satisfied with the guidelines. Our people out in the field tell me that we're better off because of them, because they tell us what we can legitimately do—and that we can do it aggressively—without risk of criminal or civil sanctions later on.

Q You seem to indicate that terrorism in this country is not a major threat now. Why?

A The best conventional wisdom is that the traditions of this country are such that injury to humans—taking of human life or causing injury—is not considered the way to

Key Points Made by Webster

White-Collar Crime

"Government frauds, public corruption and major bank embezzlement constitute our prime targets."

Organized Crime

It's getting "more and more sophisticated, involving larger sums of money and greater potential ripoffs of the public."

Informants

"The greatest threat to effective law enforcement today" is the Freedom of Information Act's weakening of the confidentiality promised to informants.

Espionage

The problem grows as the nation becomes more open to foreign visitors—the newest challenge being "recognition of the People's Republic of China."

Break-Ins

Guidelines set up in 1976 to curb questionable FBI activities have been "scrupulously observed."

Morale

Prosecution and disciplining of some agents for improper actions "caused considerable concern within the ranks, but it's not a problem now."

Minority Agents

"Hiring minorities and women is more than simple justice. It's important to our operation."

Woman recruit in training. "Classes for new agents are now running about 50 percent minorities and females."

achieve support for political causes. So most violent protest has been directed against property, such as banks or public utilities. That tradition, I think, has kept American home-grown organizations from engaging in mindless assaults on people.

The only organization I know of in this country that's close to international terrorism is the Weather Underground. They haven't made much headway, although they consumed a lot of our resources over the years. But they're still around. Our last study showed that there are probably about 60 members in the country right now.

Q Does this mean that the U.S. will remain largely immune from terrorism?

A No. Most experts think we might be quite vulnerable at some point in the future to the type of activity troubling other countries. We already have seen increasing use of the United States as a battleground for disputes not involving our government—for example, the Croats who bombed the West German consulate in Chicago. But we've been successful in every instance in either negotiating out hostages without injury—our first concern—or preventing loss of human life.

Q How will the FBI charter now being drafted by Congress affect the bureau?

A It depends on how the charter comes out. We need a charter, but it is important that it be an affirmative statement of our mission and not just a series of "Thou shalt not do this" and "Thou shalt not create this or that type of abuse." Because a charter would be difficult to change in time of emergency, in working with Congress we have been careful to stake out areas we think should be the subject of guidelines rather than nitty-gritty legislation. If you apply the principle of accountability, you would say that the Attorney General shall promulgate guidelines in certain areas, and—where appropriate—these will be subject to congressional oversight.

Q Would you say that bureau morale has suffered from the prosecution of three former officials and the dismissal and disciplining of several others?

A When I first started going out in the field to talk to agents, I found this was one of the first subjects to come up. Now it's usually one of the last—and merely a question of an update. Their main focus now is on how to do their work more effectively.

I think everyone can understand the fraternal feeling of a career service when it appears that somehow the rules were changed in midstream. That perception caused considerable concern within the ranks, but it's not a problem now.

Q Has all the bad publicity about the FBI affected the public's willingness to cooperate with the bureau?

A I haven't seen any connection with our present investigations. The bureau, however, may have suffered in its relationships with some groups as a result of the COINTEL program—more so than from the surreptitious entries.

The COINTEL program adapted legitimate techniques in foreign counterintelligence for use against domestic organizations viewed as not in the best interest of the United States. It involved, in part, the dissemination of information about those organizations to various people, with a view to discrediting the organizations.

Q Is the bureau taking steps to improve relations with the groups involved?

A Yes. We are working hard to repair whatever damage was done. We are working to rebuild confidence, especially among minorities. There is a concerted effort to increase the level of minority and female participation within the ranks of our special agents. And we are making a serious outreach in the community to groups in which we are not as welcome as we would like to be.

Q Are you making progress in the recruitment of minority and women agents?

A We are. Our agents in each field office have had to learn how to recruit people who were not pounding on our doors but whom we wanted. They've done a fine job in a very short period of time. There's every indication that our commitment is being believed in the minority communities.

We have slightly fewer than 8,000 agents. We had 144 black agents in 1977, and the same number in 1976. We were static. The same thing was true of Hispanics. And there were only 94 women agents when I came on board.

Now, we can hire approximately 260 people this year. It will go down to 120 next year under the new budget. As of the end of 1978, we had 184 blacks—a gain of 40. Hispanics went from 155 to 179, and Asian Americans from 34 to 39. Our females went up from 94 to 146. Classes for new agents are now running about 50 percent minorities and females.

Hiring minorities and women is more than simple justice; it's important to our operation. The large record-and-tape-pirating ring that we broke recently was broken by using five black and female undercover agents.

Q You mentioned that next year's budget may affect the bureau's ability to hire more agents. Is the FBI facing a serious money shortage?

A We're not holding our own, but neither is anyone else. We haven't been singled out for any special treatment. J. Edgar Hoover used to go up to Capitol Hill and ask for a round number. They say he went up 21 times, and 19 times he got what he asked for, and two times he got more than he asked for. Now we have to justify every program.

During the inflationary crunch, all of us have had to hold the line or take cuts. We have been static—in fact, we'll really shrink in personnel. We're looking at a 582-million-dollar budget for 1979. We are approved for 575 million for 1980. But we hope not to lose any agents. That's the Attorney General's goal.

Q As you expand efforts in priority areas, are other types of crime fighting suffering?

A We've curtailed almost all of our military-fugitive efforts and asked the military services to accept responsibility for that work.

On stolen automobiles, we're only interested in the major rings—there are about 500 of them—rather than single-car thefts.

I suppose the area where there is the biggest tug and pull is bank robbery. Because of budget cuts, we'll be 22 percent below where we were before on this. Those are dollars, and that means people.

So, in effect, there's going to have to be more reliance on local law enforcement. We'll help as much as we can, but there just isn't enough money to go around. □

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE
FEDERAL BUREAU OF INVESTIGATION

WASHINGTON, D.C. 20535

Letter to All Fingerprint Contributors

RE: FBI IDENTIFICATION SERVICES

Dear Sir:

PROGRESS IN AUTOMATION OF THE IDENTIFICATION DIVISION

Efforts to perfect a totally automatic fingerprint identification system for the FBI's voluminous files are progressing well. Our automated Identification Division records system contains over 1,800,000 computerized records with about 3,000 first-offender records being added each workday. The growth rate for this automated file is projected at 750,000 records annually. These records containing descriptive and arrest data are encoded into computer storage where that data is then available to print out a "no record" response and to print out identification records (rap sheets) in response to inquiries; produce name and alias cards for our manual name index file; and compile a data bank of name index information for future automated name searching capability. At present, this automated file does not contain a sufficient number of records to have a good probability of a name search "hit." We expect, however, to realize this probability near April, 1978.

Another part of this ongoing program is our project to develop the automatic fingerprint-reading equipment called FINDER. Four of the five production model FINDER systems have been delivered and the remaining one is scheduled for delivery before the end of the year. These FINDER systems will first be used to convert the criminal fingerprint card file, which means that fingerprint characteristics from 14 million fingerprint cards will have to be read and digitized into a computer data bank. After that data bank is constructed, the FINDER system will be used in the day-to-day operation of searching fingerprints by characteristics.

CHANGE IN AUTOMATED RECORD FORMAT

On request, the Identification Division provides identification records to certain authorized agencies on a "name check" basis without requiring submission of fingerprints for positive identification of the subject. Under certain circumstances, the Division attaches to such records a separate page listing the subject's personal descriptive data to assist the requesting agency in ascertaining that the record is related to the named subject. Some of these are currently being prepared by computer. Starting in July, 1976, computer-prepared identification records furnished under conditions calling for listing of personal descriptive data have this data printed on the same form (Form 1-4e) as the arrest record data. Personal descriptive data for manually-prepared identification records will continue to be furnished on a separate form (Form 1-4b) as in the past.

Agencies desiring identification records are encouraged to continue submitting fingerprints or FBI numbers to uniquely identify the subjects of records and avoid the necessity of relying on personal descriptive data for tentative identification.

CHANGE IN LATENT FINGERPRINT SECTION IDENTIFICATION REPORTS

The Latent Fingerprint Section of the FBI Identification Division has heretofore prepared a separate page to describe the circumstances concerning latent print identifications with fingerprints of subjects or suspects. This page could be detached from the report and made available to the defense in trial situations. Current court practices require disclosure of the entire report; therefore, a separate page will no longer be prepared and latent print identifications will be included in the body of the report.

JACKIE E. UTZ, ET AL; v. HONORABLE MAURICE CULLINANE

In our Letter to All Fingerprint Contributors dated February 11, 1976, contributors were advised that the Metropolitan Police Department (MPD), Washington, D. C., was ordered to cease its routine submission of arrest fingerprint cards to the FBI, and also ordered to request the return of all fingerprint cards submitted to the FBI on or after January 30, 1968. To date, the Identification Division has returned to the MPD over 81,000 of the estimated 200,000 fingerprint cards which must be retrieved from our files.

Upon completing return to the MPD of all fingerprint cards, the records of the FBI Identification Division will be void of arrests made by the MPD since January 30, 1968. You are reminded to ensure that all personnel having access to records furnished by the FBI Identification Division are aware of the effect of the Utz v. Cullinane decision.

PRIVACY ACT OF 1974

One of the provisions of the Privacy Act of 1974 requires that every agency having a system of records under its control shall keep an accurate accounting of the date, nature and purpose of every disclosure of a record to any person or to another agency. In order for the Identification Division to comply with this provision of the Act, it is necessary that all requests for identification records indicate the purpose for which the request is made. Fingerprint cards reporting arrests are, of course, self-explanatory. Please bring this matter to the attention of personnel who are authorized to request FBI identification data.

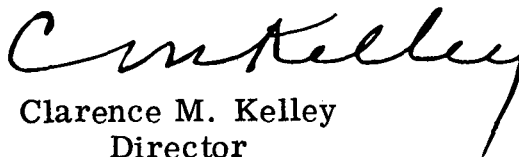

IMPROPER MAILING ADDRESS

The Identification Division receives a large volume of mail returned to it by the Post Office marked, "Improper Address." If your agency has recently relocated, promptly advise the Identification Division of your new address including zip code.

REQUESTS FOR EXPUNGING OR SEALING ARREST DATA

A court order requiring the expunging or sealing of an arrest entry should be directed to the arresting agency and not to the FBI Identification Division as the court order usually lacks the necessary identifying data such as an FBI number or local registry number. Contributors are cautioned to request the return of a fingerprint card before expunging or sealing the record in order to avail themselves of the necessary identifying data to ensure the return of the correct card. In all cases, the return of a fingerprint card to the contributor results in the complete and automatic expunction of that arrest entry from our files.

OFFICE OF THE DIRECTOR

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE
FEDERAL BUREAU OF INVESTIGATION

WASHINGTON, D.C. 20535

FOR RELEASE
TUESDAY, A.M.
JULY 14, 1970

The FBI scored new all-time highs in many phases of its operations during Fiscal Year 1970, Attorney General John N. Mitchell announced today.

FBI Director J. Edgar Hoover, in detailing some of the accomplishments of his agency, noted the arrest of a Soviet intelligence agent whose mission was to gather air defense data; the arrest of five persons in connection with the murders of mine union leader Joseph Yablonski, his wife and daughter, last December; the two largest gambling raids in the history of the FBI; prosecutive action resulting from FBI investigations of the heads of seven of the country's some two dozen Cosa Nostra "families"; and the conviction of more than 400 other hoodlum, gambling, and vice figures on an assortment of Federal charges.

Mr. Hoover said that the fiscal year saw a marked increase in protest demonstrations across the country and a corresponding increase in violent deaths, injuries, property damage, and arrests.

THE BLACK PANTHER PARTY IH290-3.

According to Mr. Hoover, there was an increased emphasis on terrorism by many groups during the 12-month period, and the Black Panther Party, which has called for the assassination of the President and other Government leaders, continued to be the most dangerous and violence prone of all extremist groups.

Mr. Hoover deplored the fact that, despite its record of hate, violence, and subversion, the Black Panther Party continues to receive substantial monetary contributions from prominent donors. With these funds, its representatives have been able to travel widely and make frequent public appearances at colleges, universities, and even secondary schools. In this way, they are able to spread their doctrine of hate and revolution and further aggravate the volatile situation on our campuses.

Mr. Hoover said that in recent months Panther activity in some cities has been conducted through "Black Community Information Centers" or the "National Committee to Combat Fascism." In reality, these are mere subterfuges to conceal actual Black Panther sponsorship.

Mr. Hoover went on to point out that Black Panther leaders are presently endeavoring to picture the organization as an innocent victim of police and other official oppression. They campaign openly to enlist support for their members who have been arrested or who are being sought by authorities on various charges. In particular, he noted that Black Panthers in New Haven and Baltimore have been charged in two separate brutal murders, and others in New York City are awaiting trial in connection with a bombing plot.

The FBI Director dwelled at some length on the foreign influences now making inroads in certain black extremist groups in the United States, particularly the Black Panther Party. He noted that Eldridge Cleaver, the Party's Minister of Information, is presently living in Algiers, where he evades prosecution on criminal charges outstanding against him in the United States. Cleaver traveled to North Korea last September and has also developed close ties with Al Fatah, the Arab guerrilla organization. This relationship has influenced the Panthers to a point where they have issued a flood of anti-Zionist and anti-Semitic propaganda and leaves no doubt that they are solidly behind Al Fatah. The Black Panthers have also made it a point to praise the government of North Korea on many occasions, to criticize United States "imperialism" in the orient, and to brag that the Party is now recognized by such "revolutionary governments" as North Vietnam, North Korea, and Cuba.

IH290-3.

PROTEST ACTIVITY

Mr. Hoover reported that there was a sharp increase in protest demonstrations on college campuses during the school year of 1969-1970, noting that a total of 1,785 such demonstrations took place.

Sit-ins and building seizures numbered 313, and Reserve Officers' Training Corps installations were subjected to a total of 281 attacks. In 73 instances students protested military recruiting on college campuses. There were 38 demonstrations protesting research for the Government. Corporate recruiters were the targets of another 63 demonstrations. There were 246 instances of arson or attempted arson and 14 bombings. Injuries totaled 462, nearly two-thirds of which were sustained by police and college officials. Eight individuals were killed during the disruptions. Nearly 7,200 arrests were made, and damages exceeded $9,500,000.

Looking to the months ahead, the FBI Director noted that student committees have been formed on numerous college campuses and will spend the summer planning activity for the forthcoming fall term. These groups plan to encourage the support of political candidates opposed to Administration policies and will insist that schools be closed for a period so that students will be free to participate in this activity.

Commenting on the massive demonstration sponsored by the New Mobilization Committee to End the War in Vietnam which took place in the Nation's Capital on May 9th, Mr. Hoover pointed out that 365 individuals were arrested following violent attacks on both Government and private property. Damages to buildings amounted to approximately $125,000, including some $50,000 in damages as a result of the bombing of the National Guard Association building. Other property damage and the expenses of police and military forces brought the total cost of this demonstration to well over one million dollars.

THE WEATHERMAN FACTION

The FBI Director stated that the fiscal year saw the emergence of the Weatherman faction of the Students for a Democratic Society as a principal force guiding the country's violence-prone young militants. The group's objectives, in part, were set out in a position paper which urged that schools and colleges be closed down because the "kids are ready for the full scope of militant struggle...."

Mr. Hoover noted that throughout the 12-month period, the Weatherman group was in the forefront of much of the activity deliberately calculated to provoke violent confrontations. In July, 1969, Weatherman leaders called for militant action in Chicago in support of the "Conspiracy Seven." The result was seen in the numerous violent confrontations last October in Chicago and the arrests of over 270 Weatherman members and sympathizers. The following month they were in Washington, D. C., protesting the Vietnam war by hurling rocks, sticks, and bottles at the Department of Justice building and leading screaming hordes through Washington's business section, causing severe damage to buildings and automobiles.

Mr. Hoover said that additional Weatherman policy was formulated in a meeting last December when leaders of that group declared their purpose to be the building of a small paramilitary organization designed to carry out urban guerrilla warfare. This, they believe, would bring about the "revolution." They also called for the establishment of an underground movement, using guerrilla tactics such as those employed by Arab terrorists. They stressed the absolute necessity of killing police and called for extensive self-instruction in the use of guns and bombs. Following this meeting, in February, 1970, many Weatherman members went underground.

These young militants attracted more headline attention the following month. On March 6th, a series of violent dynamite explosions ripped through a townhouse in Greenwich Village, New York City. Weatherman activists Ted Gold and Diane Oughton have been identified as having died in the blasts.

Mr. Hoover pointed out that Weatherman policy continues to openly support the enemies of our country. In July, 1969, several of the group's leaders traveled to Cuba where they conferred with North Vietnamese representatives. Later, other Weatherman members went to Cuba under sponsorship of the Venceremos Brigade, which recruited admirers of Fidel Castro to assist in harvesting Cuba's 1970 sugar cane crop.

The FBI Director also noted that the Chicago violence resulted in the indictment of a number of the principal leaders of the Weatherman group. Many of these individuals are now being sought as fugitives by the FBI.

SELECTIVE SERVICE INVESTIGATIONS

Mr. Hoover said that during the year, New Left-type organizations continued to advocate militant resistance to the draft in colleges and even in high schools. There was an increasing number of attempts to damage local draft board offices and destroy Selective Service records. Individuals and groups on our campuses led much of the opposition to the draft, and organizations such as the Union for National Draft Opposition, which was founded at Princeton University, called for the mass surrender of draft cards.

CIVIL RIGHTS INVESTIGATIONS

The FBI Director emphasized that investigations arising out of major disorders continued to require substantial commitments of FBI manpower, and this was especially true in connection with civil rights violations.

As just one example, Mr. Hoover noted that on February 2, 1970, a Federal Grand Jury at San Francisco, California, returned indictments charging 12 present, or former, Alameda County,

4-16241-4

California, deputy sheriffs with civil rights violations. The indictments were based on FBI investigations in connection with the arrests and incarceration of more than 400 persons in May, 1969, following disturbances at Berkeley, California. Some of those charged were accused of the shotgun wounding of demonstrators and the subsequent beating of those arrested. The trial in this case has been set for August 31, 1970.

Mr. Hoover also pointed out that the FBI has conducted an extensive investigation of the confrontation at Kent State University, Kent, Ohio, in which four students were fatally shot and others injured. Similar investigations followed the deaths of six Negroes during a riot in Augusta, Georgia, on the night of May 11-12, 1970, and the deaths of two Negroes during a confrontation between demonstrators and law enforcement officers at Jackson State College, Jackson, Mississippi, on the night of May 14-15, 1970.

COMMUNIST PARTY, USA

Mr. Hoover said that the Communist Party, USA, continued its efforts to attract the youth of America. Accordingly, it launched its new youth group, the Young Workers Liberation League, at a founding convention held in Chicago, Illinois, last February.

Communist leaders see this new group as the hope of the future, and through it they hope to attract young people as recruits to close the generation gap that exists today in the Party. This is regarded as a definite step forward since the Party had no effective youth organization and was steadily losing potential recruits to some of the more militant youth groups.

Mr. Hoover warned that events of the past year proved again that the Party was firmly committed to the Soviet brand of world-wide communism. At the celebration of the 100th anniversary of the birth of Lenin, held in Moscow last April, Gus Hall, General Secretary of the Communist Party, USA, was again on hand praising the Soviets and calling for the unity of world communism under Soviet domination.

ESPIONAGE

In discussing the FBI's other internal security operations, Mr. Hoover said that on February 7, 1970, Aleksandr Vasilyevich Tikhomirov, a Russian translator at the United Nations, was arrested in Seattle, Washington, by FBI Agents. Tikhomirov's employment was a "cover" for the clandestine collection of highly sensitive information.

A thoroughly trained intelligence operative, Tikhomirov had as his principal assignment the direction of an American agent in collecting classified documents dealing with our western air defenses. They met in secret in an effort to avoid FBI detection. Tikhomirov provided the agent with a brief case which had been altered by the Russians so that it contained a cleverly concealed compartment to hide the classified documents which were passed to the Russians. Tikhomirov was subsequently expelled from the United States in view of his activities.

THE YABLONSKI MURDERS

Mr. Hoover related that an extensive and far-reaching investigation was undertaken by the FBI after the discovery of the bullet-riddled bodies of Joseph Yablonski, Executive Board member of the United Mine Workers of America, his wife, Margaret, and his 25-year-old daughter, Charlotte, on January 5, 1970, at Clarksville, Pennsylvania. The FBI's work resulted in the arrests of five individuals on Federal charges growing out of these vicious murders. Subsequently, they were also indicted by a local grand jury on counts of murder and conspiracy to murder.

ORGANIZED CRIME

Mr. Hoover said that the continuing drive against organized crime during the fiscal year saw the two largest gambling raids in the history of the FBI.

The first occurred in December, 1969, and netted the head of the Elizabeth, New Jersey, Cosa Nostra "family," one of his top lieutenants, and more than 50 other members of a widespread numbers ring.

The second took place during May, 1970, in the Detroit area and led to the arrest of some 66 individuals, including one Cosa Nostra member described as the largest numbers operator in the State of Michigan. Also seized were nearly 60 weapons, approximately $62,000 in cash and negotiables, extensive gambling paraphernalia, and huge quantities of gambling records.

The FBI Director noted that both of these raids were based upon information obtained from court-approved electronic-surveillance installations, and records confiscated during the course of the raids indicated that the two rings were handling in excess of $100,000,000 a year in wagers between them.

TH287-21-10-1

Mr. Hoover said that other La Cosa Nostra "family" heads subjected to Federal prosecutive action during Fiscal Year 1970 as a result of FBI investigations included the allegedly ranking underworld figure in the New York City area at the present time, the head of the New England "family," the Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, chieftain, the individual alleged to be the "acting boss" of the Chicago "family" in Sam Giancana's absence, the head of all La Cosa Nostra operations in the Southern California region, and the founder and leader of a rebel Cosa Nostra mob in the Buffalo, New York, area.

The FBI Director also noted these other developments during the fiscal year: (1) the November 21, 1969, conviction of New York City La Cosa Nostra "captain" Anthony DiLorenzo for the theft of more than $1,000,000 worth of securities from a brokerage house; (2) the December 13, 1969, conviction of New York City La Cosa Nostra "captain" Antonio Corallo on interstate bribery charges involving various civic officials; (3) the February 27, 1970, indictment of Ilario Zannino (better known to the underworld as Larry Baione) for conspiring to fence $165,000 worth of jewelry taken from a Boston merchant; (4) the April 28, 1970, arrest of Frank Brancato of Cleveland, Ohio, for allegedly extorting money from two businessmen; (5) the April 30, 1970, arrest of the son and a top "captain" of a La Cosa Nostra "Commission" member on charges of conspiring to melt down American coins and sell the silver abstracted therefrom; and (6) the May 21, 1970, conviction of New York City La Cosa Nostra "captain" Salvatore Manarite for threatening the lives of a loan-shark victim and his family.

Mr. Hoover continued that in addition to its own accomplishments, the FBI--through a continuing program of exchanging information with other Federal, state, and local agencies--enabled those other agencies to conduct more than 750 raids during Fiscal Year 1970 and arrest some 4,000 organized crime and gambling figures.

AIRCRAFT HIJACKINGS

The FBI Director pointed out that aircraft hijackings continued to represent a serious national threat during Fiscal Year 1970.

Mr. Hoover emphasized that substantial sentences have been received by many of those hijackers who returned to the United States after having become disenchanted with life in Castro's Cuba. As an example, he noted the case of Alben William Barkley Truitt, who received a 20-year prison sentence on August 13, 1969, after having been found guilty of aircraft piracy and kidnaping. A 25-year sentence was meted out to Ronald Thomas Bohle on May 15, 1970. Another, Thomas James Boynton, received a 20-year sentence last month at Miami, Florida, after pleading guilty to kidnaping charges which arose from an aircraft hijacking.

One recent case involved Auther Gates Barkley, who hijacked a plane on June 4, 1970, and demanded that one hundred million dollars be delivered to Dulles Airport in Virginia. He threatened to shoot members of the crew if his demands were not met. When the plane landed, its tires were shot out. FBI Agents rushed the aircraft and gained entrance to the cockpit. Returning Barkley's fire, they wounded him and then forcibly subdued him.

OTHER CRIMINAL INVESTIGATIONS

In discussing highlights of other FBI investigations in the criminal field, Mr. Hoover mentioned the convictions of David H. Wenger, former Teamsters accountant; Leonard Russo, former vice president of a construction company; and John P. McCarthy, notorious New York labor racketeer, for violations of the Welfare and Pension Plans Disclosure Act. FBI investigation showed that kickbacks amounting to over $50,000 were paid by the owner of a New Jersey hospital in efforts to obtain a loan of $875,000 from the Teamsters pension fund. All three men subsequently received prison sentences and, in addition, substantial fines were assessed against Wenger and Russo.

Mr. Hoover noted that another vital field in which the FBI has jurisdiction concerns false statements and claims made to other Government agencies and departments. Following one far-reaching investigation, on February 6, 1970, a Federal Grand Jury at Knoxville, Tennessee, indicted 16 individuals on charges of Fraud Against the Government and Conspiracy. These indictments grew out of extensive FBI investigation into fraudulent claims submitted by various businesses for moving expenses, property losses, and small business displacement expenses in connection with an urban renewal project in Knoxville.

In another case involving efforts to defraud the Government, four individuals were sentenced at Washington, D. C., following their guilty pleas to an indictment which alleged a conspiracy to defraud the Government of more than $4,000,000 in connection with the production of rocket launchers for the Navy's use in Vietnam.

NATIONAL CRIME INFORMATION CENTER

Mr. Hoover stated that the FBI's National Crime Information Center continued to assume an increasingly important role in serving law enforcement during the fiscal year. This computerized system, which stores information concerning wanted criminals and stolen property, including vehicles, guns, securities, and other identifiable items, contained over two million records at the close of the fiscal year. Through one hundred control terminals, it now serves local, state, and Federal law enforcement agencies in 49 states, the District of Columbia, and Canada.

The FBI Director pointed out that numerous regional computer networks add to the effectiveness of the National Crime Information Center. He said that as a matter of fact, there are now some 31 regional computer systems throughout the country which are connected directly to the National Crime Information Center, and it is anticipated that additional local and state computers will be added in the forthcoming months. The average number of transactions handled on a daily basis is now over 52,000. Positive responses to inquiries placed in the system, known as "hits," are averaging over 500 a day.

POLICE TRAINING

Mr. Hoover said that FBI training assistance extended to local law enforcement agencies reached a new peak during Fiscal Year 1970. FBI instructors afforded this type of assistance in 8,568 law enforcement training schools attended by 260,214 officers. Particular emphasis was on topics such as mob and riot control and police management, as well as subjects dealing with human relations and police-community relations.

During the latter part of 1969, the FBI organized and conducted a series of specialized conferences dealing with extremist groups and violence. A total of 271 conferences was held on a nationwide basis, attended by 23,651 people representing 6,341 law enforcement and prosecutive agencies.

During the 12-month period, 199 officers completed the course of training afforded by the prestigious FBI National Academy. Construction of the Academy's new facility at Quantico, Virginia, is well under way and it is expected to be completed in the Fall of 1972. At that time, it will be possible to expand the Academy's operations to the point where a total of two thousand officers will be able to undertake the regular National Academy training each year, and an additional one thousand officers will be able to participate in specialized schools during the same period. The new facility also will provide for the training of all FBI Special Agents.

COOPERATION AND SERVICE FUNCTIONS

Mr. Hoover said that during the fiscal year the FBI Identification Division received more than seven million sets of fingerprints for processing, an average exceeding 29,000 every workday during the 12-month period. Working in cooperation with local law enforcement agencies all over the country, this Division conducted fingerprint searches resulting in the identification of more than 37,000 fugitives, an increase of 16 percent compared with Fiscal Year 1969.

Mr. Hoover also pointed out that the Identification Division processed more than 285,000 items of evidence for latent fingerprints during the fiscal year and, in addition, handled almost four million miscellaneous forms and inquiries dealing with fingerprint matters. The experts comprising the FBI's Disaster Squad were dispatched to five major disasters to assist in identifying 173 victims. At the end of the fiscal year, the files of the Identification Division contained over 197 million sets of fingerprints, representing some 85 million persons.

During Fiscal Year 1970, the FBI Laboratory conducted almost 385,000 scientific examinations of evidence. Some 28 percent of these were on a cost-free basis for other Federal and non-Federal law enforcement agencies.

MISCELLANEOUS

In summarizing his agency's operations during the fiscal year, Mr. Hoover reported that fines, savings, and recoveries in FBI investigations during that period reached a record figure totaling almost 411 million dollars, a sum representing a return of approximately $1.60 for every dollar appropriated for FBI operations. Convictions in FBI cases reached a new, all-time high of well over 13,000, resulting in actual, suspended, and probationary sentences totaling over 47,000 years. For the 15th consecutive year all prior records were surpassed with the recovery of more than 30,500 stolen automobiles in FBI cases.

Mr. Hoover noted that several far-ranging auto-theft rings were smashed through FBI investigations during the fiscal year. As an example, he mentioned one case in which Special Agents identified 30 automobiles and made simultaneous arrests of nine individuals at Camp Lejeune, North Carolina, and Miami, Florida. Subsequently, 18 persons were indicted by a grand jury in connection with this case.

Another sharp upturn was reflected with the location of more than 30,000 Federal fugitives in FBI investigations, a new, all-time high. This figure included almost 2,800 violators of the Fugitive Felon Act, criminals being sought at the request of local and state authorities, as well as four notorious felons who were on the FBI's "Ten Most Wanted Fugitives" list.
